

THE CEO WHO DREAMS BIG

Arundhati Bhattacharya, President & CEO, Salesforce, South Asia

» “This war (West Asia-Israel) may be similar to the Covid-19 situation, in terms of risks... If there is one thing that is anti-business, it’s uncertainty. Try and be as sure as you can be,” said the recipient of the Lifetime Achievement Award

» On near-term optimism, she said, “I do believe India has certain abilities to be resilient, because we also have a very large internal consuming community. People that are very dependent and are very much a part of the global supply chain have far more worries than we have”

» She added that India is not as leveraged as some of the other countries and that does give you some leeway to meet certain adjustments, both fiscal and monetary

MAKING A FUTURE-READY CONGLOMERATE

Anish Shah, Group CEO & MD, Mahindra Group,

» “We realise that in the world today, a large conglomerate will fall into its own trap and its own bureaucracy. If it’s not agile, we are competing with start-ups, and for that, we have to be able to drive that level of agility decision making,” said Shah, on how to build an agile conglomerate. He also championed collaboration as a federation

ENERGY SECURITY SHOCK

Samiran Chakraborty, MD & Chief Economist—India, Citibank

» Discussing India’s energy security and long-term growth strategy, Parikh said, “We should certainly have more oil than we have discovered. So far, our policies have not been conducive to attract explorers here.”

» On macroeconomic effects, Chakraborty said, “Two important parts of the economy—power and mobility—have not been impacted and are unlikely to be impacted even if the shock is there”
