IN 2024, OVERALL SPORTS SPONSORSHIPS IN INDIA WERE VALUED AT ₹7,421 CRORE, WITH THE IPL ALONE COMMANDING ROUGHLY HALF THE SHARE

its scale, but for how its economics are wired. Most other cricket leagues follow slightly different scripts. In SA20 and ILT20, central revenues are largely controlled by their respective boards, with franchises operating under tighter financial structures and less assured payouts.

CPL and The Hundred offer a pooled model just like IPL, but on a much smaller revenue base, limiting franchise upside. In The Hundred, the central pool is shared with the franchise and respective counties.

While MLC in the US is a privately-owned league, the franchise owners are betting on the league's future as much as their teams. Investors who own franchises have invested in this central entity, American Cricket Enterprises, which operates MLC.

"Multi-league ownership expands the revenue base across geographies, diversifies audience touchpoints, and creates year-round brand recall rather than a two-month seasonal spike cycle," says Mahek Vikamsey, Partner, KPMG in India. According to him, this enables higher sponsorship value through bundled domestic and international exposure, continuous fan engagement, and better content and intellectual property monetisation. At the same time, shared scouting and operations improve team performance while boosting overall franchise valuation.

IPL'S NEW PRICE TAG

The recent stake sales in RR and RCB do more than add eye-catching numbers to two of the league's most visible franchises. They mark a turning point in how IPL teams
