nights, with each match generating around $100,000 in stadium food and beverage revenue alone, according to the Kotak report. Match days, despite accounting for less than 10% of franchise income, trigger a 30–70% surge in travel demand, pushing room rates up by 20–30%, and lifting spending across airlines, restaurants, and retail at the host city.

Over time, IPL has quietly turned its host cities into recurring economic hubs. It was a driving force behind the transformation of stadiums in Guwahati and Raipur, additional home venues for RR and RCB. Hosting IPL matches has elevated these stadiums into world-class venues capable of hosting international cricket. “Looking ahead, the real upside lies in formalising and scaling the surrounding ecosystem: purpose-built stadiums, sports tourism, and allied media and entertainment assets that generate sustained, year-round value rather than being limited to the tournament window,” says Vikamsey. The league culture pioneered by IPL has also spread well beyond cricket. Pro Kabaddi League has consistently crossed 200 million viewers, making it India’s second-biggest sponsorship property after cricket.

The model is being replicated across the Indian Super League, Premier Volleyball League, and a growing number of emerging properties—each one borrowing from a template that began on that April night in Bengaluru in 2008. BT
