FRENCH HONOUR

S.H. Raza painted The Village and Eglise (above) and became the first non-French artist to be awarded the Prix de la Critique. With this award he joined the ranks of artists like Bernard Buffet. He also started showing his work in Venice, Tokyo, Brussels, Sao Paulo, New York and Britain. His work was exhibited at the Museum of Modern Art in Paris. Indian philosophy, specifically tantric beliefs and their evocative values, influenced Raza greatly. The reality of being an Indian artist in the West at a period when all art from this country was regarded imitative, weighed on him. But what saved his work from being just exotic was the effort to be Indian in spirit, says critic Yashodhara Dalmia.

Homi J. Bhabha

The Cambridge-educated physicist was the first chairman of India's Atomic Energy Commission and the brain behind the first atomic reactor in Asia that went into operation at Trombay, Bombay, in 1956. He also founded the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research in the city. Though he said 50 bombs would cost Rs 10 crore, an expenditure quite small when compared to the military budgets of many countries, he was a votary of disarmament.
