

"I HAVE ALWAYS STOOD FOR JUSTICE FOR MY PEOPLE."

Sheikh Muhammad Abdullah

He wasn't called Sher-i-Kashmir for nothing. Released in January, Sheikh Abdullah was jailed in April on false charges of complicity with Pakistan. He became prime minister of Kashmir in 1948, but was dismissed in 1953 after rumours that he, in a conversation with American politician Adlai Stevenson, had offered J&K as a base for United States to operate from, against the USSR, in exchange for recognition of an 'independent' Kashmir. Jailed for 11 years, he was exiled in 1971 for 18 months. He became the chief minister of J&K in 1977 and remained in the post till his death in 1982.

Passage to India

Harold Macmillan became the first British prime minister to visit India after Independence. Time magazine reported, "Macmillan took with him the cheering knowledge that the British are today more popular in India than ever before."

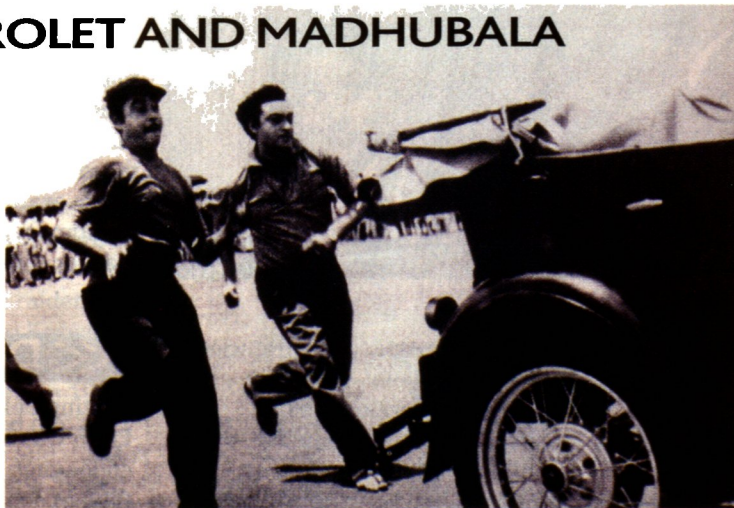

- Hungary's Communist regime charged Imre Nagy with treason for leading the revolution and executed him.
- Lolita by Vladimir Nabokov was released.
- Boris Pasternak (below) won the Nobel Prize in Literature though Soviet authorities pressured him into relinquishing it.

- Explorer I, the first US satellite, successfully orbited the earth.
- Nine thousand scientists of 43 nations petitioned the UN for a nuclear test ban.

A 1928 CHEVROLET AND MADHUBALA

"Babu samjho ishare, horn pukare"; "Hum thay woh thi, woh thi hum thay"—Kishore Kumar yodelled and danced and laughed his way through Chalti Ka Naam Gaadi, a kooky romantic ensemble comedy starring the Kumar brothers (Ashok, Anoop and Kishore). A 1928 Chevrolet and the luminous Madhubala made this Satyen Bose movie a classic.

1,200

dollars is what Mehboob Khan, his wife Sardar and Nargis got as foreign exchange allowance from the government for attending the Oscars, where Mother India was nominated, only to be beaten by Fellini's Nights of Cabiria.
