THE BUZZ OF THE WEEK

With a report of a government-appointed commission saying that the spending power of 77 per cent of Indians is less than Rs 20 per day, there is a considerable disquiet in the Congress over its India Rising campaign.

VOICES

"The deal doesn't make India a nuclear weapons state. We will be sitting outside the nuclear club board meeting on a stool."

Murli Manohar Joshi, former human resources minister

"This sudden display of courage by the prime minister is intriguing. There was not even a whimper when democracy got murdered in Goa or when farmers committed suicides."

Ravi Shankar Prasad, BJP leader

"The problem with this coalition—it's different from NDA, where the cementing factor was power—is that there's an element of ideology."

Kapil Sibal, science and technology minister

"Money will continue to come rapidly into the Government's hands if economic growth continues. What is important is to use these resources to remedy India's deficiencies."

Amartya Sen, Nobel laureate

"If you are mocking me for owning a farmland, target others who own farm land and do not till it. Why are they coming after me? If they want to arrest me, I'm ready to go to jail."

Amitabh Bachchan, actor
