Career Wisdom

Improve Your Job Search This Year

You've been searching for a new job for the past six months without much success. Most days, you feel like you're beating your head against the wall. Maybe it's time to throw out your old approach and try something new. After all, the New Year is here, and it's a perfect time to take a fresh look at things.

Realistic Expectations

There was a time when it might have been reasonable to look for a management job with only two years of experience. But in the current job market, employers can be more selective. A larger number of highly experienced people are now competing for those management jobs.

Reevaluate Your Situation

If you are employed and seeking greener pastures, reassess your situation. Now that you have had a chance to look around, you might decide things are not that bad where you are. This is not a great time to be job searching, so if your situation is tolerable, consider staying put.

Review Your Resume

Your resume may not be attracting attention, and it could be time to spiff it up a bit. Ask someone to critique your resume, and be open to their suggestions. You can also get advice from the Resume Center and Monster Resume Writing Services.

Reevaluate Your Approach

Looking for a job is a full-time job in itself. If you are dedicating a few hours a week to your job search, consider kicking things up a notch. In times like these, you need to be going full steam.

Take a Break

Sometimes you just need a break from the stress of job searching. Give yourself permission to take a week or two off. You will be surprised how your outlook can change.
