tiating factor" since "knowledge creation and dissemination is the business of business schools." The school has just launched a two-year doctoral programme with Bengal Engineering and Science University on Biotechnology Business Management and a one-year programme on Social Enterprise Management. Sydenham Director M.A. Khan, on the other hand, explains that his school is a "ranabhoomi (battlefield)" that expects "discipline, dedication, passion and a desire to learn from its students". The school, in turn, endows them with the skills and the platform that are necessary for getting a headstart in their desired field of expertise.

Delhi-based FMS and IIFT have hit a rough patch with their rankings registering a decline this year. Similarly, HR veteran TISS has come down from its 18th position last year to 23rd this year. The competition is toughening. With volatile market forces holding sway, B-schools will have to dance to the tune of the day and the MBA aspirant will be the final gainer.
