

NMIMS, MUMBAI

Expansion is the buzzword at the Narsee Monjee Institute of Management Studies (NMIMS). From one of the first MBA programmes in actuarial science and capital markets to the recently added 'MBA Tech', which combines the techniques of management and engineering, the institute has constantly been adding new feathers to its cap. "Management is our core strength, but we are expanding into science and the arts to fulfil our vision of being a university," says Vice-Chancellor M.N. Kondap.

To make sure you don't miss the point, Kondap also highlights his school's emphasis on social responsibility. Each MBA programme has a compulsory course on corporate social responsibility, he says. The highly active Social Enterprise Cell runs programmes for street children and on disaster management.

BHASKAR PAUL

NMIMS pulsates with extra-curricular energy and is one of the most culturally active B-schools. Its students won 109 awards in debates, theatre, quizzes and management festivals among others last year.

The institute is planning to move beyond the realms of Mumbai and its campus in Bangalore is expected to be ready by the year-end.

S.P. JAIN, MUMBAI

The rise of S.P. Jain Institute of Management and Research (SPJMR) in the list of the country's best B-schools can be attributed to its two guiding principles—practice and value-based growth. The institute gets an edge from constantly adding new programmes to suit the needs of the country's changing economy. A third of all the electives at the institute have been introduced in the last three years.

Rated among the best in terms of prospective salary packages, SPJMR is an attractive option for B-school aspirants. It was ranked seventh in South Asia in a survey of the best B-schools by the Singapore-based Asia Inc in August 2003. It stood second in the Highest Starting Salaries category in a study of more than 900 schools, conducted by Business World India.

Says M.L. Shrikan, dean of the institute, "Currently, our focus is on a symbiotic relation between the industry and the institute. Internships and industry-supported projects are some initiatives we have undertaken to further this linkage." The institute is also unique in its student intake policy, wherein soft skills and the emotional quotient of the applicants are given prominence.

RACHIT GOSWAMI

JBIMS, MUMBAI

There is a saying that life at the Jamnalal Bajaj Institute of Management Studies (JBIMS) is measured not in minutes or hours but by deadlines. The last thing students can complain about is not having much to do. But this is no vision of doom. Life at JBIMS is quite a rollercoaster ride with students being practically in charge of all activities on the campus—from selecting guest lecturers to organising cultural events.

Besides, a business school couldn't be better placed than this.

Located at Churchgate, bang in the middle of the business hub of Mumbai, the quality of corporate interaction that takes place here is virtually unmatched by any other institute in the country.

Securing admission to JBIMS is no mean feat. In 2006, 55,000 candidates took the Common Entrance Test. Only 120 were selected, and each chose JBIMS as his/her first preference.

Director Chandrahauns Chavan says, "The college takes in only the best of students and we ensure that they make the best of their potential here."