

Students at IIFT look at their options

Agribusiness Management

With a number of Indian majors and multinational companies entering the agribusiness, a specialisation in this field of management, offered by the IIMS, has become popular. "The Indian economy largely subsists on agriculture and this business has its unique requirements owing to multiple stakeholders and perishable commodities," says Professor Sushil Kumar, chairman, Agriculture Management Centre, IIM (L). The placements are at par with the regular MBA courses.

Pharmatech

Yet another course targeting the booming pharmaceutical industry is the MBA Pharmatech offered exclusively by Narsee Monjee Institute of Management Studies (NMIMS), Mumbai. This course is focused in its approach and aims to create professionals for the medical services industry exclusively. Principles of finance and human resource are taught to students with respect to the pharmaceutical industry. "This course is aimed at creating managerial professionals in the pharma industry," says Dr R.S. Gaud, head of programme, NMIMS who hopes to encash upon the international demand for such manpower.

Marketing Communications

Also part of this wave of specialisation is the Symbiosis Institute of Business Management (SIBM) which offers an MBA in Marketing Communications. Students are introduced to subjects as diverse as advertising, brand management and corporate relations. Says Arun Muddidri, director, SIBM, "Apart from marketing communication, students can choose elective courses from other disciplines."

A specialised MBA definitely adds value to one's career and to the business world. "The world is moving from generalisation to specialisation. This is an era where the corporate world is looking for candidates with super specialisation be it retail marketing as a part of management or branding as a part of marketing communication," says Muddidri. However, students opting for any specialisation need to base their decisions on a strong orientation towards that sector along with the assurance of growing opportunities within it. Says Chacko, "When you pursue a course targeted towards a specific sector, for instance healthcare, you restrict your options to the growth of that sector and to the opportunities within it."

For students who want to cash in on the growth opportunities that various booming sectors are providing today, a specialised MBA might be the perfect launch vehicle.
