

PHOTOS BY MANDAR DEODHAR

valuation, leverage and integration head-on. He explains why this transformational deal could redefine the company's next decade of growth. Edited excerpts:

Q: Persistent Systems has delivered strong organic growth over the years. Why was this the right time to pursue a transformational cross-border acquisition?

A: We have grown from being a $500-million organisation to roughly a $1.7-billion global organisation over the last several years. As we have increased in size and scale, we've built newer capabilities like AI-led platform engineering, cloud, digital engineering, and more. Our customers have seen us evolve from a smaller player into a very credible challenger to the larger firms, and today 82% of our revenues come from North America. However, we needed stronger delivery centres, capabilities, customer relationships, and feet on the ground in Europe. Nagarro turned out to be an excellent cultural fit—from its digital engineering DNA and AI capabilities to its strong footprint across Europe, West Asia, and Japan, it complements us beautifully.

“We have grown from being a $500-million organisation to roughly a $1.7-billion global organisation over the last several years”

The combined company grows from a $1.7-billion