The management of the ₹4,550 crore company has taken a category-wise approach. In curd, paneer, and buttermilk, the portfolio was built around probiotic curd, probiotic buttermilk, and yoghurt. "More recently, there have been high-protein products aimed at the health-conscious consumer. The idea has been to move into categories where we can combine trust, repeat consumption and better economics," says Nara.

In FY26, revenue from value-added products grew 18% on a year-on-year basis. "Its contribution to overall revenue was at 35.5% from 32.5% a year ago. It means the portfolio is becoming structurally stronger and not just larger."

Success in dairy does not always come on the back of research. "The consumer can never articulate what he wants unless he is exposed to something. Buttermilk and dairy beverages are good examples, where a positive response saw the market take off," says Hemendra Mathur, an agritech expert and investor. He says the next wave of demand will come from quality milk where Country Delight has already made its presence felt.

PICKING THE BEST BET

The value-added strategy for each player is markedly different. Milky Mist, synonymous with paneer, has stayed away from milk. "It is difficult to crack it since it is dominated by large cooperatives and private sector players," says K. Rathnam, CEO of the company that is based in Erode in Tamil Nadu.

Plus, milk grows a modest 4-5% each year, with no change in consumption patterns. "Our focus, therefore, is on products. Earlier, technology was not easily available. Now, those who invest in it stand to gain," says Rathnam. His company has a wide portfolio and aims to
