

RISING SHARE

NOTE ● Traditional value-added products ● Emerging value-added products; *Estimated; Traditional value-added products include ghee, paneer, curd, buttermilk, lassi, ice-cream, butter Emerging value-added products include cheese, whey, yogurt, condensed milk, probiotic, organic milk, UHT milk; SOURCE 1LATTICE

BEYOND MILK Amul procures upwards of 35 million litres of milk each day

20 |

be a part of every meal. “Breakfast could start with UHT milk and butter, while paneer is for lunch, with a healthy Greek yoghurt as a snack. Dinner will have our curd.” In FY25, Milky Mist, which is looking to go public, had revenues of ₹2,350 crore (net profit of ₹460 crore). “We have been growing at 30% each year for many years,” he says.

The decision to invest in paneer was taken in the early 1990s. According to Rathnam, there were a couple of obvious reasons. One was that at least 90% paneer was coming from the unorganised sector, and the south was hardly exposed to the product. “Plus, at least half the population in the south is vegetarian. Non-vegetarian consumption is not daily,” he says. It made perfect sense to push paneer across South India, where Milky Mist is today the biggest player in terms of revenue.

Consumers are moving towards protein. The next decade will see more launches with shifting consumer preferences. No compromise in taste”

JAYATHEERTHA CHARY
MD, MOTHER DAIRY
FRUIT & VEGETABLE