

3

4

1. Grammie's 'Man vs Wild' highball uses house-made Palo Santo soda to introduce a woody, resinous note

2. The Silk incorporates silkworm salt as part of the final serve

3. 'Ignorance is Bliss' from PCO combines bourbon, chyawanprash, coffee, sweet vermouth, and bitters

4. Café Loco applies cocktail techniques to zero-proof drinks built around ingredients such as shilajit, ashwagandha, giloy

Florence, it was the first cocktail to sell out," recalls Sheet Suri, head of marketing at Pass Code Hospitality. "People were fascinated by the idea of trying chyawanprash." What followed surprised her more. "People asked for toasted bread so they could spread chyawanprash on top. Watching people in a bar in Florence enjoying Manhattan-inspired chyawanprash cocktails while eating chyawanprash on toast was so unexpected. But proof that great flavours can cross cultures in the most surprising ways."

Other bars continue to push the conversation forward. At Grammie, bar manager Ashwin Sanotra's 'Man vs Wild' highball uses house-made Palo Santo soda to introduce woody, resinous notes. At Dos, Chef-Owner Jatin Mallick has created a goat cheese cocktail that reimagines the Bloody Mary through tangy dairy. Pendulo serves a Litti Picante featuring a sattu-ghee wash. At Rika, the Pan-Asian restaurant at Park Hyatt Hyderabad, the Pachadi Picante takes inspiration from Andhra kitchens, using dondakaya pachadi—a bold, spicy preparation made with ivy gourd (tindora), while Café Loco's new Ayur Bar applies cocktail techniques to zero-proof drinks built around ingredients such as shilajit, ashwagandha, giloy, triphala and mulethi, etc. "Our idea was never to create a health menu," says Joy Singh, founder, Café Loco. "We wanted to build a bar, just without alcohol, where every drink has the depth, complexity, and surprise of a cocktail."

With bartenders willing to turn unfamiliar flavours into unforgettable experiences, you never know what you might find in your glass next! BT