

ALL SMILES:
LSR students
make their mark in commerce

college is already preparing to notch up its student strength to 2,100 from the present 1,400 over the next three years keeping the implementation of OBC reservations in mind.

SRCC has delivered excellence in management education for as many as eight decades. It was the first college to have been set up at the undergraduate level with the task of developing talent in the field of business. While its faculty has increased 20-fold since then and the student strength gone up from 12 to 1,400, its benchmarks of performance have also risen with each passing year.

Among other colleges in the commerce stream, the capital's Lady Sri Ram College (LSR) has moved to No. 2 position this year from No. 7 last year. With impressive alumni like Naina Lal Kidwai and Vinita Bali dominating the world of business and finance, LSR needs little else to assert its position. Says Principal Meenakshi Gopinath, "Surveys show that in the first two decades of this century, women will head a majority of organisations and this calls for a new orientation to management, one that we provide at our college."

The commerce courses offered at the college provide students with a wider perspective and equip them to deal with the contemporary opportunities and challenges. Visiting faculty comprise some of the best minds in the country, giving students ample opportunity for informative and educational interaction. There is a strong emphasis on practical application and theory is never taught in isolation.

In the third position, the Commerce Department of Loyola College, Chennai, has retained its ranking since last year and given the college the distinction of figuring in the top three slots in all the three streams of arts, science and commerce. It appears that in keeping with its emphasis on the all-round development of its students, the college has also emerged as a top all-rounder.

Following Loyola is St. Xavier's College, Kolkata, in the fourth position. That commerce in this college is the most sought-after stream can be gauged from the fact that the number of seats in this section is more than those of the other two put together. Last year, as many as 454 out of 568 students graduated with a first class. Principal Father Mathews says, "I feel humbled guiding the destinies of so many."

One of the most dramatic movers has been Christ College, Bangalore—perhaps because of its commerce department's advanced syllabi through learner-centred teaching methods.

with Tanvi Saraf in Delhi, Akhila Krishnamurthy in Chennai, Swagata Sen in Kolkata and Stephen David in Bangalore

FROM THE PRINCIPAL

BANDEEP SINGH

"We groom students to become global entrepreneurs and not just managers."

P.C. JAIN, SRCC