"India's Best Colleges",
June 4, 2007

"The extensive survey of academic excellence acts as a valuable guide map to those seeking admission to undergraduate courses."

VITULL K. GUPTA, Bhatinda

Hits and Misses

Although the survey has a number of new entrants in the field of engineering, there is scope for improvement ("India's Best Colleges", June 4). It is already known that the IITs will notch the topmost positions every year. So instead of devoting the first seven positions to them, you can allot the first slot to the IITs. That will make space for others to emerge in the elite list.
RITWIK SHARMA, Delhi

As the principal of K.J. Somaiya College of Arts and Commerce, I feel elated to see my college figure in the Top 10 list. While last year it was on number four, this time it made it to number three.
DR VAIDEHI DAPTARDAR, Mumbai

There are courses beyond engineering, medical, science, arts and commerce. It seems your magazine is meant only for the capable and talented students who score high marks.

DIVYANG PUROHIT, on e-mail

Your survey is mostly based on perception, while there is little emphasis on facts. Colleges are places of higher education and most of them don't have enough funds to market themselves. This is one of the reasons why many bad colleges are getting high ranks.
TAMAL GHOSAL, on e-mail

In your next issue, you should include colleges that offer courses in fine arts, home science, architecture, agriculture, pharmacy and computers.
KAVITA VACHHRAJANI, Jamnagar, Gujarat

What is the point in ranking Kasturba Medical College, Manipal, among the Top 10 when its MBBS degree is not recognised by the Medical Council of India? Such surveys often mislead students.

P.P. GUPTA, on e-mail

Ratio of average marks at the time of admission and marks scored by students should be the main parameters to judge academic excellence of a college. Also, the dropout rates should be taken into account.
SAUMYA SINDHWANI, Delhi

The annual survey is not judicious. How can you eliminate colleges like BITS, Pilani; Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore; NITK, Surathkal from the engineering list? This only shows that your survey is incomplete.
DILIP SHAH, Udaipur

The survey gives an insight into the top 10 colleges that made it to the honours list. At a time when class XII results are out, the survey will help students make up their mind.

A.K. CHAWLA, Delhi

The annual survey gives an authentic analysis of colleges and ranks them accordingly. It was heartening to see new winners emerge in the Top 50 list.
R.D. SINGH, Jammu

Education in India has suffered over the years. Although there are a number of good colleges in the country, lack of high-end jobs prompt students to pursue their careers abroad. Also, many reputed institutes are gripped with controversies which affect performance of students. This needs to be rectified.
A. JACOB SAHAYAM, Thiruvananthapuram

Presidency College, Chennai, figures in the Top 10 commerce list in your survey. But ironically, the college only offers under-
