

come of age ("Out of the Woods", June 11). Post its glorious times in 1960's and 70's, there was a lull in Tollywood when its movies suffered from an identity crisis—they were reduced to mere rip-offs of Hindi and south Indian films. With new directors coming in, it's good news pouring for the industry which is all set for a makeover.

Profitable Partnership

Japan and India can be ideal partners in so many diverse fields ("Love with Tokyo", June 11). Both are high-tech, peace-loving and pragmatic. Many joint projects can be started by them in various countries. This win-win situation needs total utilisation of the lucrative opportunities waiting to be exploited.

The CPI(M) seems to be playing weird games ("Comrades at War", June 11). There is no logic behind the suspension of V.S. Achuthanandan and Pinarayi Vijayan from the politburo when the two are being allowed to continue in their official posts as chief minister and state secretary respectively. The whole episode looks like a comic strip.

Not Just Fathers...

With today's stressful workplace, it's unfair to say dads alone are facing the challenge in parenting ("Overstretched Dads", June 11). With more number of women working, young parents have 'added' responsibilities to share. It's not the onus of men alone. Both men and women are trying to redefine the idea of 'parenting'.

MANSI ANEJA, Delhi

It's not about young parents trying to meet expectations at workplaces and homes. Times have changed and with new economic forces such as global competition, there's immense pressure on everyone to perform. Even children are bearing the brunt of cut-throat competition.

Stress Control

A spate of suicides by army personnel is a worrying development ("Combating Stress", June 11). Fighting internal turmoil is very frustrating for the security forces. Denial of leave and ill-treatment meted out to officers are some other factors that induce such drastic measures. It is imperative to take steps to de-stress jawans. Yoga and meditation, too, can help mitigate their sufferings.

THE GREAT DIVIDE

Manmohan Singh is justified in discouraging the obnoxious show of wealth as it can kickstart a social unrest ("Lurching to the Left", June 11). As the prime minister of the country, he's rightly worried about the widening gap between the haves and the have-nots.

UTTAM PEGU, Delhi

A social unrest is waiting to happen as the gap between the rich and the poor is widening. Before focusing on economic growth, the Government should take steps to bridge the divide. After all, GDP growth and FDI inflow alone are not synonymous with development.

The Film That Got Away

In October 1974, at the height of J.P.'s "total revolution" movement in Bihar, a young man, city bred and university educated, put everything aside to go and work in a "genuine movement of the people". Anand Patwardhan, then 25, saw it as a spontaneous movement and felt impelled to put it on record. He decided to film the rallies. In Patwardhan the beginning the idea was to simply record police violence at the rallies. But soon the force of the movement inspired him to embark upon a proper film. "A film which I could show to people in Bihar, which would become part of the ongoing process of the movement." The half-hour-long film Waves of Revolution speaks for itself. Composed of dark shots, stills of mobs and loose footage of stampedes and police-firings, it is a poignant portrait of an uprising that led to the implementation of the Emergency.
