Resume Update Checklist

Many of us make lists to keep on top of deadlines at work but forget to do a periodic check to see if our careers are on track.

Here is a checklist of nine signs that it may be time to update your resume and look for new opportunities:

1. Salary Envy - The guy in the cubicle next to you just got a job offer at twice his current salary.

2. Pink Slips in the Air - Rumors of company layoffs are circulating, but your boss says there's nothing to worry about.

3. New Career Path - Your old resume lists your previous jobs as massage therapist and personal trainer, even though you now have eight years experience as a commodities trader.

4. Time Flies - Your most recent resume does not include the last two years of work and accomplishments at your present firm.

5. New Priorities - Your resume lists more fraternity and university sports awards than job accomplishments.

6. Less is More - With the addition of your present job, your resume is now three pages long.

7. Moving On - The address and telephone number on your resume are from your last home or apartment.

8. No Personal Stuff - Your resume includes hobbies and personal information after the education section.

9. High Tech Update - Your resume does not list any of the computer software you've learned to use in the last two years.
