ON THE MORNING of August 12, N. Chandrasekaran, Chairman of Tata Sons, sent a letter to the board stating he was not offering himself for reappointment at the end of his term. His reappointment was expected to come up at the AGM on August 18. Chandra, as he is known, took over the top job at the conglomerate in February 2017, and this is his third term.

For several months now, there has been an internal battle at the group that essentially germinated from what appears to be multiple points of dispute between Tata Sons, the group's holding company, and Tata Trusts, which owns two-thirds of the former.

It started soon after the death of Ratan Tata in October 2024, when Noel Tata assumed charge of Tata Trusts. It has been a tumultuous period for the group since Tata Sons' board meeting in February, relating to the reappointment of Chandrasekaran as Chairman. Before this, two key trusts—Sir Dorabji Tata Trust and Sir Ratan Tata Trust—had given their approval for the same.

“Subsequently, the resolution was tabled at the Tata Sons board on February 24, 2026. However, the proposal was not carried through because one of the board members did not support it, and in the absence of unanimous support, I chose to defer the decision,” Chandrasekaran said in his letter.
