

From stressed to blessed is achievable when leadership becomes mindful

Most managers only become bosses but not leaders. How many times have we all heard this. The ones who become leaders are the ones who have transformed themselves, their co-workers and even organizations. To quote from the Bhagavad Gita,

उद्धरेदात्मनात्मानं नात्मानमवसादयेत्
आत्मैव ह्यात्मनो बंधुरात्मैव रिपुरात्मन

(Translation: Elevate yourself through the power of your mind, and not degrade yourself, for the mind can be the friend and the enemy of the self.)

Bhagavad Gita Verse 6.5 aptly sums on how this transformation is largely possible when managers elevate their minds. They stop using weapons of blame and excuses but instead focus on accomplishments of their co-workers thereby becoming persuasive and transformative leaders. In essence, it is conscious leadership where you create a growth-mindset environment in which people can thrive.

Dr Carol S Dweck in his best-selling book – Mindset -- states of an instance, where psychiatrist Aaron Beck while working with his clients realized that it was their beliefs that were causing problems. The doctor noted that whether people were aware of it or not, people kept a running account of what happened to them.

This meant that our minds kept on monitoring and interpreting things. What was phenomenal was that people with growth mindset were not judging themselves or others. They choose consciously and communicate effectively. When we meditate to expand our consciousness, we perceive reality from an evolved perspective. The yogic mindset can always create the miraculous magic of each moment. Even when doing mundane chores, a yogi can tap into the flow of inspiration.

Holding unwavering focus, the mind of consciousness is efficient and effective in dealing with everyday realities by being. The vast void mind of awareness is aligned to the world of all enlightened beings of the past as in the moment of now-alight as a Lamp. The magic of Now is consciousness. As a company, we always wanted harness technology to help with decision making. Our Declaration of Conscious Movement (DOCM) serves as a platform for encouraging leaders, institutions, and communities to explore decision-making approaches that balance progress with conscious consideration and collective well-being. We treat consciousness as an inherent human right, working to embed quality standards and ethics into modern belief systems and leadership. Our vision is to enable organizations to build more conscious, ethical and future-ready enterprises through a range of initiatives, frameworks and digital platforms.

We call this a Consciousness Infrastructure designed for the next evolution of human systems. This digital ecosystem will combine social media, wellness, and e-commerce, a one stop destination for both enterprises and businesses.

Our platform CNESS, is a collective of aligned enterprises guided by principles of growth and conscious leadership. From web applications serving conscious businesses to culture certification for companies based on operating pillars that prioritize purpose beyond pure profit and commitment; to impact training providing structural training systems and impact measurement tools to build brand trust and reliable global synergies, we will be adding value to enterprises. As the famous quote points, 'He who does not enjoy the journey, can never reach the destination'. This is just the beginning of creating a conscious ecosystem, the journey will continue.
