Ifs and Whys of the Super App With younger generations entering the workforce, conscious leadership has become cornerstone for organizational transformation.

According to the latest Great Places to Work India's Great Mid-size Workplaces 2026 report, in just three years, Gen Z has gone from making up 13% of the workforce in 2023 to 26% in 2026. This indicates that one in every four employees now belongs to the youngest generation in the workforce.

Construction sites to IT offices, BFSI sectors and retail, Gen Z/ Gen Alpha are becoming a major part of the workforce, bringing different expectations about careers, flexibility and growth.

This changed dimension in workforce has brought a need for leaders who are adept at balancing not just data but are also mindful and self-aware.

Nandhiji says he took a leaf out of his entrepreneur grandfather's journey. His grandfather was Ayya Nadar, an entrepreneur from Sivakasi, a city known as the 'Little Japan of India'. A satyagrahi and a close associate of Mahatma Gandhi during India's freedom movement, Nandhiji's grandfather followed Gandhi's clarion call to sustain handmade manufacturing to support local livelihoods. Nandhiji, too, was inspired by his grandfather to set up venture to foster economic development for the community.

His parents -- ASC Bose and Kanchana Bose, were both athletes who represented India in badminton and were also involved in the family business of firework, metal powder, printing, tea, and coffee plantations.

Nandhiji's work focuses on cultivating clarity, sustainable decision-making, and long-term value creation.

His approach emphasizes the practical application of awareness, behavioural insight, and accountability within leadership, enterprise, and governance systems. The CNESS Super App, he believes, is the first trust digital ecosystem created for meaningful connection, authentic identity and personal growth and community and livelihood.
