

Why CNESS Certification?

CNESS Conscious Product Certification examines whether responsible intent has become visible through credible practices, appropriate evidence, trustworthy outcomes and a commitment to improvement.

"This is more than a certification badge-- it is an opportunity to demonstrate that your organization creates not only commercial value, but responsible and conscious value for humanity," the company notes. It also helps retain and attract top talents into its milieu. The certification also helps companies gain visibility through the CNESS directory and partner channels.

Nandhiji believes that many organizations think of certification as the end of a journey. The assumption is simple: complete an evaluation, receive a certificate, display the logo, and move on.

But the reality is different. A certificate alone does not create new business opportunities. It does not automatically increase market visibility, attract strategic collaborations, or strengthen long-term business relationships.

What organizations truly need is an ecosystem that continues to create value long after certification. That is the philosophy behind CNESS.

Rather than positioning certification as a final destination, CNESS positions it as the beginning of a larger business journey.

Around 68 per cent of Indians, nearly 1 billion people, are currently of working age, between 15 and 64. This large workforce gives India the potential to drive growth through manufacturing, services and domestic consumption.

Companies can cut attrition and boost revenue

Nandhiji's work bridges inner development, conscious governance, and technology-enabled social transformation

Drawing from the Siddha lineage, his philosophy integrates nāda yoga (sound vibration), meditation, and daily spiritual discipline for practical enlightenment. According to a report by Gallup, organizations with high employee engagement are more likely to experience higher levels of innovation and adaptability.

Designing an unstoppable culture to make CNESS a global movement

Nandhiji's initiative draws inspiration from the consciousness principles associated with World Yogi Day and Maha Sivratri.

As a four-year-old, Nandhiji reportedly experienced divine interventions. Later as a young adult leading an active family life, he was initiated through a near-death experience by his first Guru, and his journey into the mystical realm of the Siddha as a yogi began.

After years of seeking "wholeness" through connection with the inner world, Nandhiji came to understand his highest purpose was to make humans aware of consciousness.

He spent years meditating in solitude in the mountains of Arunachala, a sacred 2,268-foot hill located in Tiruvannamalai in Tamil Nadu. Nandhiji received guidance from several Siddha masters.

Through years of intense yogic practice and inner discipline, he experienced expanded states of consciousness, which later became the foundation of his teachings.

The World Yogi Day and Maha Sivratri are two properties that he chose to develop to connect with like-minded individuals and turn it into a global awareness movement. Launched in 2004, the global yoga and awareness initiative highlights the universal philosophical significance of yogic traditions.

Conceived as a unifying moment

