

gross sales of ₹14,011 crore, with an RoE of 29%. Profit after tax was a robust ₹1,902.28 crore.

At the time of the interaction, Mathur mentioned a tailwind in the oil and gas market, before the recent escalation in West Asia. “The geopolitical disorder is helping in terms of being local and emphasis on oil & gas and water sectors,” he said, adding the company is investing heavily in the US. In Saudi Arabia, the company is investing both in oil and water segments.

Mathur also remains upbeat about the Indian market, although it is a mixed bag, and says that the acquisition of Sintex gives Welspun Corp a pan-India brand as well as a network of distributors, dealers and influencers across the country. India has two components for Welspun—one is to produce and supply in the domestic market and the other is to produce in the country and export; and the company is active in oil as well as water business.

“In the last one or two quarters, domestic supply saw some slowdown due to fund allocation in government projects like Jal Jeevan Mission. But now we are seeing a resurgence. We are anticipating that the subsequent quarters are going to look extremely good,” he says, adding that exports from India remain very strong.

Sintex came as a new opportunity that enabled the company to move to the B2C category and create more value for stakeholders. It acquired the plastic water tank maker in March 2023 for ₹1,251 crore through the insolvency resolution process.

“The combination of B2B plus B2C gives exponentially high valuation,” says Mathur. Sintex is also being built to have a larger portfolio. While earlier, it was only into water tanks, Welspun Corp is now building multiple product lines under the brand, including pipes, in particular OPVC pipes. For the nine months of FY26, Sintex is expected to have a revenue of about ₹500 crore, as per the third quarter earnings call.

Analysts too remain upbeat about

SINTEX BUYOUT

- 01 Acquired Sintex-BAPL in March 2023 through insolvency resolution process
- 02 Acquisition gives pan India presence and distributor, dealer network
- 03 Building multiple product lines beyond tanks; looking at OPVC pipes
- 04 Creates more value for stakeholders, expected to boost domestic growth engine
- 05 For 9MFY26, Sintex is expected to report a revenue of about ₹500 cr

the acquisition and its value to Welspun Corp. Ashutosh Somani, Executive Director—Metals & Midcaps, JM Financial Institutional Securities, says Sintex gives Welspun Corp a credible domestic growth engine alongside its cyclical line pipe business. “The turnaround is on track with capacity expansion and portfolio broadening underway, but market share recovery and margin normalisation will be key to unlocking value,” he says.

No wonder then that Mathur remains confident about business prospects and believes that the impact of the investments and expansion will start trickling in over the next three to nine months and come into full play by next year.

But not one to rest on these achievements, Mathur says the company needs to focus on two clear issues going forward. One is to leverage the expansions already underway and second is to start planning for the next five years. “We cannot keep our eyes shut for the next three to five years,” he says.

Ask him about his management style and Mathur says with a laugh that it may be better to ask his colleagues. But then he goes on to elaborate that he has a brilliant set of people who are very empowered and run the day-to-day business. But at the same time, Welspun Corp has an extremely robust review and governance mechanism. “This is to ensure we are on top of things, and yet we are not directly involved,” he says, adding that one has to be plugged into the business but also create the flexibility for the business itself to operate on their own.

With so much on his plate, Mathur says while it is difficult at times, they wear multiple hats and know how to switch gears. “This continuous fire in the belly has helped us reach from where we were to where we are today,” he says.

With its eye on the future, Mathur’s fire-in-the-belly attitude is set to serve the company well. BT

@surabhi_prasad