“The modern luxury tea consumer is actually a blend of several groups,” explains Batra.

Younger consumers want transparency, sustainability and digital engagement. “They want to know the people behind the tea, the farms and the philosophy,” says Chatterjee. “Storytelling and traceability have become essential.”

At the same time, India’s heritage teas are gaining renewed recognition abroad. According to Indian premium tea market analysis, premium Darjeeling teas saw price increases of 10-15% in 2024, helped by geographic indication certification and stronger global branding.

If the market continues its current trajectory, tea in India may soon occupy a space similar to fine wine—a beverage that tells stories about craftsmanship and culture. BT
