

“ObserveNow Playbook: Bootstrapping to Mission 100 Crore - Jeet Sharma’s Winning Stroke”

Jeet Sharma
Co-founder & CEO
ObserveNow

ObserveNow has crossed ₹15 Crore+ in revenue and is growing at 188% YoY. what has been the core success recipe behind this scale?

Profitability isn't a choice, I believe it is the fundamental principle of running a business. ObserveNow was profitable within the first 6 months of its existence. At ObserveNow, our elite list of Fortune 500 clients from Google Cloud, Meta, Lenovo, IBM, Intel, LinkedIn, Zscaler, F5, etc. are our real investors. They have validated our business and continue to do so with a 93.5% repeat customer ratio. Our YoY growth stands at 188%. The lesson for me is simple: real businesses are built on client satisfaction, not investor bets.

Your vision is to scale to ₹100 Cr ARR while retaining 100% ownership. What structural shifts-across team, systems, and revenue models-will drive this next phase of growth?

Our mission is simple: ARR ₹100 Cr in the next three years while staying bootstrapped and profitable. Our vision is Tandav, the unstoppable drive to remove anything that blocks that goal. We are taking ObserveNow global, with focused expansion into EMEA and Southeast Asia. With over ₹4 Cr in international event contracts already signed, we are just getting started. The global B2B events market is a USD 500 billion opportunity, heading towards a trillion dollars by 2030, and ObserveNow is building to lead it. Alongside, we are launching ObserveNow.ai for data intelligence and Khass Gifts for premium B2B gifting to own the entire B2B marketer lifecycle. The goal is clear: to become the single most trusted name in B2B field marketing and data intelligence, globally.

Your financials are strong, and your client list rivals heavily funded startups. What did you do differently to win — and retain — and onboard Fortune 500 companies as your clients?

For us, everything starts and ends with the client. Client satisfaction is the top priority, always. We are completely performance-driven, and the most important metric for us is how happy and successful our clients are. Even when we crack a big deal, the first conversation within the team is never just about revenue. It is about how we can deliver better, faster, and smarter for that client. We constantly remind ourselves to keep the client first in every decision we make. This mindset reflects in how we onboard, how we execute, and how we support. We focus on understanding their real business challenges, not just selling a solution. That is what builds trust, long-term partnerships, and strong retention. In the long run, we believe that if you take care of your clients, growth takes care of itself.

With AI reshaping the marketing landscape, how do you envision ObserveNow.ai becoming the go-to platform for B2B marketers?

ObserveNow.AI is a revolutionary product aimed at solving every aspect of a B2B marketer's work lifecycle. We are making our most significant strategic leap yet with the launch of ObserveNow.AI. It is a B2B CXO data intelligence vault and a CRM platform designed to help enterprises identify, connect with, and manage their target audiences, while streamlining the end-to-end sales cycle through AI-driven insights. This marks a pivotal transformation, evolving from a services-led organization to a SaaS-first company. It is not just a product expansion, it is a structural shift in our business model.

What kind of work culture have you built at ObserveNow, and how does it differ from others in the industry?

Internally, we often say: one year at ObserveNow equals three years in the industry. That's the pace at which we grow, execute, and learn (an Interstellar reference). We've designed ObserveNow around accelerated learning for every team member, with one simple expectation: evolve every single day. In just five years, we've seen careers compound rapidly as people were given ownership, accountability, and the chance to build, not just execute. Today, former ObserveNow professionals are thriving across leading brands in India and globally, and that's a legacy we are proud of. We are also proud to be a Nari Shakti-led organisation, with 53% women in our workforce. Performance drives us, but inclusion strengthens us. We work hard and party harder, and that high-performance energy is the real heartbeat of ObserveNow.

As you move toward ₹100 Cr ARR while staying bootstrapped, what message do you hope this journey sends to India's next generation of entrepreneurs?

Scaling to ₹100 crore ARR while staying bootstrapped is a conscious choice and a harder one. When you don't have external capital, every decision must be funded by real revenue, real customers, and real impact. There's no room to hide behind burn rates or vanity valuations. Growth has to be earned.

But that's exactly what makes it powerful.

Bootstrapping forces discipline. It ensures your product evolves through genuine customer feedback, repeat business, and measurable success. It builds resilience into the DNA of the company. When customers fund your growth, you know your model works.

I believe the next generation of Indian entrepreneurs should think beyond chasing funding rounds or a quick IPO exit. Raising capital is a tool, not the end goal. Building a legacy, a profitable, enduring institution that creates value for decades, should matter more than a golden parachute moment.

When we reach ₹100 crore ARR this way, it won't just be a financial milestone. It will be proof that sustainable, customer-backed growth is still the most credible way to build.