

A NEW 'RISE'

Under Anish Shah, Mahindra & Mahindra has reinterpreted its “Rise” philosophy and moved away from expansive ambition to disciplined growth

IN 2010, MAHINDRA & Mahindra (M&M) bought the South Korean company SsangYong Motor. The deal was a statement of intent, aligned with its corporate philosophy, ‘Rise’. M&M’s ambitions then were defined by its global dreams and big bets, which remained the company’s strategies for a while. However, a decade later, as those bets began to weigh on performance, a different kind of leadership emerged. Under Anish Shah, the company reinterpreted ‘Rise’ as disciplined growth and knowing when to walk away.

Shah will complete five years as M&M’s Group CEO & Managing Director this April. During his tenure, he has seen the conglomerate through an unforgettable pandemic, confronted several business challenges, and eventually put it on a solid growth path.

It is the first time that a non-family member has occupied the corner office at M&M. “Therefore, it was very important to plan that process very carefully,” says Shah. This year, BT-PwC India’s Best CEOs has awarded Shah for his contribution to M&M’s growth story.
