

DP Abhushan Limited: Shaping the Next Chapter of a Jewellery Legacy

How Santosh Kataria is transforming a family jewellery business into a modern retail brand

Ratlam in Madhya Pradesh has long been recognised as the Gold City of India, a reputation built on decades of jewellery craftsmanship and trade. Among the families associated with this legacy is the Kataria family, whose jewellery business began in 1940. Over the decades, what started as a modest family store has evolved into DP Abhushan Limited, an organised jewellery retail chain serving customers across Central India.

At the centre of this transformation is Santosh Kataria, Chairman and Managing Director of the company. Growing up in a family deeply connected to the jewellery trade, Mr. Santosh was introduced early to the workings of the business—from understanding customer preferences to observing the discipline required to maintain consistency in craftsmanship and service.

When he stepped into a leadership role, the Indian jewellery market was beginning to undergo a visible shift. Consumers were increasingly seeking certified products, modern designs, and a more organised retail experience. Recognising this transition early, Mr. Santosh focused on preparing the company for a future that required both scale and structure.

His approach centred on gradually transforming the traditional family enterprise into a modern retail organisation. The company invested in larger, experience-driven showrooms, expanded design collections, and strengthened operational systems to support a growing retail footprint.

"Jewellery purchases are often connected to life's most meaningful occasions," Mr. Santosh says. "Customers expect purity, craftsmanship, and an experience that reflects the value of what they are buying."

Under his leadership, the company steadily expanded its presence across Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan, establishing showrooms in both established urban centres and emerging regional markets. Today, the brand offers a wide portfolio across gold, diamond, platinum, and silver jewellery, catering to diverse consumer needs—from traditional bridal collections to lightweight contemporary designs.

Alongside retail expansion, Santosh Kataria has also recognised the growing importance of digital engagement in the jewellery industry. The company has gradually strengthened its e-commerce presence, enabling customers to explore collections and connect with the brand online. This digital integration complements the showroom network and reflects a broader effort to create a seamless omni-channel retail experience.

A defining milestone in the company's journey came with its listing on both the National Stock Exchange and the Bombay Stock Exchange. The listing marked a significant transition—from a closely held family enterprise to a publicly listed company operating with the governance standards expected in India's capital markets.

Today, DP Abhushan Limited serves more than three million customers and operates eleven branches across Central India. The company's growth reflects both strong regional brand recognition and the broader shift toward organised jewellery retail.

Despite this expansion, the chairman continues to emphasise consistency in customer experience across every touchpoint—whether in-store or online. He believes that sustainable growth in the jewellery sector requires balancing scale with quality, transparency, and long-term customer relationships.

Looking ahead, Mr. Santosh Kataria envisions steady and strategic expansion. The focus remains on strengthening the company's presence in existing markets while exploring opportunities in new cities where organised jewellery retail is gaining momentum.

From its beginnings as a single store in Ratlam to its emergence as a publicly listed jewellery retailer, the journey of DP Abhushan Limited reflects the evolution of a family business adapting to a changing industry. Under the leadership of Santosh Kataria, the company continues to build on its heritage while positioning itself for the next phase of growth.
