LENDING A HELPING HAND

At Indian Bank, the emphasis extends beyond growth metrics to the profile of borrowers and the sectors receiving credit. Their portfolio is structured around defined inclusion priorities

CREDIT GROWTH AT public sector banks is usually examined through asset quality, capital ratios and return metrics. At Indian Bank, Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer Binod Kumar argues that another lens is equally relevant. “We define social impact as integral to our core banking operations,” he says. “Beyond CSR, our lending and credit delivery are deliberately structured to reach vulnerable communities, empowering women, and strengthening livelihoods.”

That approach has earned the bank recognition in the Social Impact category in the BT-KPMG Survey of India's Best Banks and NBFCs, the findings of which underline that the bank's social footprint is driven primarily through its lending portfolio rather than standalone CSR activity.

PRIORITY SECTOR

Priority sector lending anchors the bank's inclusion strategy. As of December 2025, priority sector advances stood at ₹2.15 lakh crore, accounting for 43.75% of Adjusted Net Bank Credit—above the regulatory requirement.

Within this, agriculture and weaker sections account for a significant share. In Q3FY26 alone, the bank disbursed over ₹56,000 crore in agriculture loans, with ₹26,000 crore reaching 1.42 million small and marginal farmers. This year, ₹7,149 crore has been extended to SC and ST borrowers in agriculture.

Out of total priority sector advances, over 3% has gone to SC and ST borrowers and 9% to minority communities. “It is not just about meeting regulatory requirements but about ensuring that credit flows to the most impactful segments of the economy,” Kumar says.

“So, when we talk about social
