This explains why conglomerates often turn to acquisitions. Buying proven products, IP and engineering talent allows them to establish a foothold quickly and shorten the time-to-market.

For example, Axiro Semiconductor's formation was anchored in the acquisition of the Radio Frequency component business from Japan's Renesas Electronics Corporation, bringing a mature product portfolio, established customers and experienced engineering teams to the Indian ownership.

"We started with proven products already deployed in global networks, which significantly reduced early-stage execution risk," adds Yanduru.

L&T has adopted a similar philosophy, albeit at a larger scale. The group has committed $300 million to get LTSCCT off the ground and will continue to invest based on performance.

"When L&T Semiconductors was formed in 2023,
