

ness, and 13% from Hyperpure, and no contribution from quick commerce. But in FY24, Blinkit's contribution surged to 17% of its ₹13,545 crore revenue, as its topline tripled year-on-year from ₹806 crore in FY23 to ₹2,301 crore in FY2024. And by the October-December FY25 quarter, Blinkit's share further rose to 26%.

Goyal has been placing his bets on Blinkit's growth for a while. In fact, it was the potential of the quick commerce business that motivated him to make the acquisition in 2022, even if it meant putting himself at risk. Despite its perceived high valuation and Zomato's faltering market value post listing, the management decided to take the plunge.

Challenges, however, remain. As the group pushes for aggressive expansion, analysts believe its profitability may remain under pressure in the near-term.

"They have diversified well over the past few years. Now it is adding 1,000 dark stores, which in the long run may prove to be beneficial. But except the Zomato business, all other segments like Blinkit, Hyperpure or District are still not turning profits. That remains a concern," says Joseph, adding that its overall growth story looks promising.

Experts view the lack of profitability as a short-term setback. With the business verticals now under the Eternal umbrella (pending shareholder and regulatory approvals), Motilal Oswal projects rapid growth. The topline is expected to surpass ₹47,000 crore by FY27, up from ₹13,000 crore, with a net profit exceeding ₹4,700 crore within the next two years. BT
