FASHION ON DISPLAY Galeries Lafayette is hosting several fashion shows to give visitors a chance to study the latest style trends and discover the French brands shaping fashion today

Paris is one of the fashion capitals of the world, so how can you not visit luxury department stores like Le Printemps and Les Galeries Lafayette? Even if you don't plan to buy anything, it's always fun to window-shop and gawk at the beautiful and chic garments on display. To add to the excitement, Galeries Lafayette is hosting several fashion shows to give visitors a chance to study the latest style trends and discover the French brands shaping fashion today, priced at €25 for a 30-minute show. It is also offering pastry lovers and budding bakers a chance to learn to make macaroons. Attend a 90-minute session for €59, orchestrated by a professional pastry chef.

WINE & CHEESE TASTINGS

How can we talk about Paris, let alone France, without indulging in wine tasting, which is even better when paired with cheese? French food and wine are themselves reasons enough to visit the country. So do not miss out on some gastronomic delights and exceptional wine in all the Olympics frenzy. Cheese boards and accompanying wine pairings are a true cause for celebration, and you should indulge as much as you can! Just book in advance, as a lot of people visiting the city will have them on their minds and itineraries.

GO ALL EMILY IN PARIS

If you are a fan of the Netflix show Emily in Paris, head to town in search of all the filming locations. There are several walking tours available that take you to her apartment, Gabriel's restaurant, Emily's bakery, Place de Valois—where Savoir, the marketing agency where Emily works, is located, etc. The walk will enable you to explore the city from a whole new angle and visit areas that may not be on your itinerary otherwise. Typically, these cost €30 for a 2-2.5-hour walking tour. BT
