NOTE THESE ARE NOT THEIR ONLY INVESTMENTS. THEY MAY HAVE OTHER HOLDINGS

just for the sake of starting a start-up,” says Agrawal.

Then there's Noida-based individual investor and lawyer Safir Anand, who has over 220,000 followers on X. As of March 31, 2024, Anand held a little over 1% stake in small-cap listed firms Poojawestern Metaliks and Shree Pacetronix. His start-up portfolio includes companies from fintech, semiconductors, and media and entertainment. According to Tracxn, he holds a 0.11% stake in the online interactive storytelling platform KahaniBox and 0.17% in AI-based virtual trial solutions for beauty brands Orbo AI.

Before investing, he looks at what problem the start-up wants to address. “I also zero in on factors such as the opportunity side, how the promoters are towards the problem, humbleness and education of promoters. Promoters should also be hungry for growth and have skin in the game. I am not a fan of claims that in the past one of the promoters sold ‘XYZ’ start-up at a dream price as there may not be a correlation of one success to another,” Anand says.

THE LURE OF START-UPS

Why are ace market players investing in start-ups? One reason is listing gains, like the one made by the Kedias. Trishneet Arora, Founder and CEO of TAC Infosec, says Vijay Kedia's decision to invest was driven by his vision to “support and elevate innovative ventures that promise robust growth and substantial impact”. Of course, getting a respected investor like Kedia on board was great for TAC. “It not only validates our mission and strategies but also instils a deep sense of trust and credibility among other potential investors and partners,” he says.

Amit Ramani, Founder and CEO of Awfis Space Solutions, in which
