RISKS

HIGH RISK OF FAILURE

Start-ups are inherently risky, with a significant likelihood of failure due to various factors like market competition, financial mismanagement, or product/service viability issues

LACK OF LIQUIDITY

Unlike publicly traded stocks, investments in start-ups typically lack liquidity. It may be challenging to sell your investment and realise profits quickly, if at all

UNCERTAIN MARKET CONDITIONS

Start-up successes can be heavily influenced by external economic factors and market conditions, making it difficult to predict whether a start-up will thrive or struggle in the long run

REGULATORY AND LEGAL CHALLENGES

Start-up investments may be subject to regulatory scrutiny and legal complexities, posing challenges for investors in terms of compliance and potential legal disputes

REWARDS

1 POTENTIAL FOR HIGH RETURNS

Successful start-up investments can yield substantial returns, often surpassing those of more traditional investment avenues like stocks or real estate

2 OPPORTUNITY FOR INNOVATION

Investing in start-ups allows you to support innovative ideas and technologies that have the potential to disrupt industries and drive positive change in society

3 PERSONAL SATISFACTION AND FULFILMENT

Start-up investing can provide a sense of fulfilment by contributing to the growth and success of early-stage companies, as well as supporting aspiring entrepreneurs in realising their dreams

4 INFLUENCE AND INVOLVEMENT

Often, investing in start-ups allows investors to actively participate in shaping the direction and growth of the company, providing opportunities for mentorship, strategic guidance, and networking
