to the fullest even as we continue to build what is needed to become a fast-growing economy.

The government has also promised to bring out an Economic Policy Framework that will outline its approach to economic development and also usher in the next generation of economic reforms. This is most welcome.

The proposals related to urban development are also remarkable. It is well known that cities are the engines that power growth. India needs a holistic approach to urbanisation, whereby cities are liveable even as they continue to expand to meet the needs of the economy. The Transit Oriented Development plan for 14 large cities with populations above 3 million looks to enhance the ease of living in urban areas. The plan to remake cities as growth hubs promises to give a much-needed synergy to growth and urbanisation, something that is essential for developing 21st century India.

The Budget is filled with a number of proposals that hold great potential to boost India's long-term growth. These proposals have been crafted with great imagination.

Overall, the Budget is a reassuring and imaginative plan that sets the stage for India's exponential development. It sets the key pillars for India to become a Viksit Bharat, addressing every aspect of the economy, employment, and growth. This detailed and forward-looking Budget blends policymaking with judicious resource allocation, ensuring a balanced and inclusive approach to India's transformation. By building on the last 10 years and shifting growth from investment-led to consumption-led, this Budget truly represents a progressive step towards a visionary and growth-oriented future for India. BT
