

ONWARD MARCH

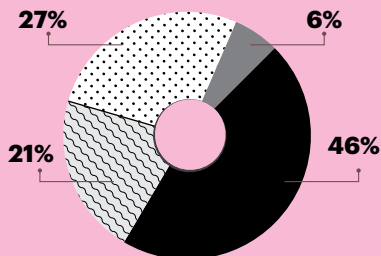

● The GMV of quick commerce in India has jumped in the last few years

*GMV AT SELLING PRICE, EXCLUDING DELIVERY FEE SOURCE REDSEER

MARKET SHARE

● Blinkit is ahead of its peers going by GMV market share

■ BLINKIT ■ ZEPTO ■ SWIGGY INSTAMART ■ OTHERS

FIGURES ARE MARKET SHARE BY GMV; DATA AS OF MARCH 2024
SOURCE JM FINANCIAL

“Blinkit will be larger than Zomato in one-tenth the time. The scale it brings to the table is huge. Blinkit was about wanting something quickly”

DEEPINDER GOYAL

CO-FOUNDER AND CEO, ZOMATO

When an order is placed, a picker is alerted immediately via a handheld device that guides them to the correct shelves. With an average order containing six SKUs, the picker can collect, scan, and pack the items within 1.5 minutes. Simultaneously, a delivery partner is notified and is ready to dispatch the order as soon as it's packed, ensuring quick delivery and satisfied customers.

Blinkit leads the pack with 526 dark stores nationwide, establishing itself as a clear frontrunner. Swiggy, with approximately 500 dark stores, is making significant strides with its Instamart service. Meanwhile, Zepto, with 350 dark stores, is the dark horse in this race, achieving remarkable success despite lacking legacy backing. And they're aggressively expanding further. Palicha says Zepto will increase the store count to 700 by March 2025, and Blinkit CEO Albinder Dhindsa has said that the aim is to get to 1,000 stores by then.

Even bb now has opened around 400 stores. Ganesh says that even though bigbasket and other sizeable players like Flipkart—which is yet to announce its quick delivery platform—aren't native to this segment, they will be able to thrive in the space.

THE NEXT JUMP

Groceries were just the start. Quick commerce players are now expanding into electronics, fashion, toys, printing services, and more, indicating a shift towards a comprehensive retail strategy.

Swiggy Instamart recently partnered with Hamleys, the British toy

