

“Consumers have been ordering everything from gold coins during the festive season to air purifiers, headphones, toys and more from Swiggy Instamart”

PHANI KISHAN ADDEPALLI
CEO, SWIGGY INSTAMART

“India has got a large organised retail available; if you marry that with quick commerce, the customer will come”

K. GANESH
SERIAL ENTREPRENEUR

retailer owned by Reliance Retail, to offer a diverse range of toys to be delivered in the 10-minute window. “Swiggy Instamart has now expanded its product selection and assortment to more than 10,000 products, particularly in categories like toys, beauty, electronics, and home & kitchen. Consumers have been ordering everything from gold coins during the festive season to air purifiers, headphones, toys, and more from Swiggy Instamart,” says Addepalli.

Meanwhile, Zepto introduced Zepto Café in select cities and neighbourhoods for swift delivery of snacks and bakery items. And Blinkit has entered the market for high-demand electronics items such as Sony’s PlayStation 5 gaming console. It has also ventured into the sale of air coolers and fans in some urban centres, the delivery of gold coins during the festive season, Valentine’s Day gifts, and jersey sales during cricket matches.

As quick commerce continues to diversify and innovate, it poses intriguing questions about the future landscape of retail and consumer behaviour. Bhatnagar of Redseer notes that in FY24, while e-commerce experienced 12% growth, the quick commerce sector surged dramatically, growing by 75-80%, albeit on a lower base. E-commerce GMV was $60 billion in FY23, according to India Brand Equity Foundation.

“India has got a large organised retail available; if you marry that with quick commerce, the customer will come,” Ganesh says. He cites the example of bigbasket, in which the Tata group has a 66% stake. It has the benefit of having access to consumer electronics retail chain Croma, which is also a part of the Tata group, so it can deliver washing machines and other consumer durables in 20-30 minutes. The hy-

