

Bharat Bling

The Indian luxury consumer will have become more evolved by 2047 and won't be restricted to the big cities, with global brands gravitating towards Tier II ones

BY SMITA TRIPATHI

C

IRCA 2047. TEXTILE mill entrepreneur Riddhima Singh, 36, walks through the marble atrium of a downtown luxury mall. Surrounded by global luxury stores such as Dior and Gucci, she shops for herself and her family before making her way to designer Indian brands. The mall has all the glitz and glamour of a luxury mall in present-day Delhi or Mumbai. The only difference: it's located in Ludhiana.

"As the economy strengthens and consumer purchasing power increases, cities like Jaipur and Ludhiana will emerge as key markets for luxury brands. We foresee the rise of more luxury destinations similar to Emporio, which may expand into Tier II cities if economic conditions are favourable," says Pushpa Bector, Senior Executive Director and Business Head at DLF Retail. According to her, these cities have enormous potential for luxury retail due to their increasing affluence and sophisticated consumer

AI IMAGES OF A FUTURISTIC MALL GENERATED BY HARDIK CHHABRA