

GAINING GROUND

● From Q1FY24 to Q1FY25, transactions on the ONDC platform witnessed a significant increase ● In July 2024, ONDC clocked nearly 12 million transactions

SOURCE ONDC

“The significant change with ONDC is that once one makes themselves visible on the network, any buyer using any buyer application can see them”

T. KOSHY

MANAGING DIRECTOR & CEO, ONDC

“All digital public infrastructure in their early days had friction... If we can give UPI to the world, ONDC will be significant, but it needs some time”

BHAVIK VASA

FOUNDER & CEO, GETVANTAGE

ones], they should have the capacity for making good catalogues, good packaging, and good logistics,” Koshy says.

For too long, sellers have struggled to establish a digital presence, constrained by platform limitations. But recently, ONDC launched an interoperable QR code that Koshy says will empower every seller. Now, sellers can display their QR codes anywhere—on storefronts, products, marketing materials, or on social media—instantly connecting with customers both offline and online.

For consumers, it offers convenience: a quick scan with any QR scanner app or ONDC buyer app (currently Paytm and magicpin) links them directly to the seller’s online store through their preferred buyer app.

Before the launch of ONDC’s interoperable QR code, sellers were either not online because of demand generation costs, or had to pay a high revenue share on other platforms. Now, with this tool, they can drive their own growth in affordable ways.

With a big base of sellers connecting a large number of buyers, ONDC aims to provide increased viability for products and services, thus bridging the technology gap, while generating revenue.

Stakeholders believe ONDC is here to stay, but they also highlight that it will take some time.

While challenges remain—from ensuring trust and credibility, effective integration with the network, to capital infusion—the platform represents the country’s idea of inclusivity. Will it become the next UPI that the world will want to follow? For that to happen, we need to keep our fingers crossed. BT

@PalakAgarwal64