

ADDRESSING THE JOBS PROBLEM

(From left) Siddharth Zarabi

Manish Sabharwal,
Vice Chairman,
TeamLease Services

Dhiraj Nayyar, Chief
Economist, Vedanta

Laveesh Bhandari,
President & Senior
Fellow, Centre for Social and Economic Progress

Sabharwal, Nayyar, and Bhandari addressed a session titled 'The Rush for Jobs: Who Will Employ Them All?', where they spoke about the key challenges in the Indian employment landscape

According to Sabharwal, there are enough jobs in India, but the real problem is employed poverty as wages are low. He added that human capital is important for long-term prosperity of a country and India is blessed with it

Nayyar believes what Indians mean by lack of jobs is the lesser number of government jobs, and that the country's population has a high affinity towards 'sarkari naukri'. Bhandari added that the fact that there is a mismatch between the salary expectations of graduates and the amount that companies are offering poses a problem

There is a need to urbanise and financialise India, and raise human capital to catch the attention of the global companies in terms of investments, said Sabharwal in conclusion