

“Millennials more interested in impact of philanthropy”

Desmond Kuek, Executive Director & CEO of Temasek Trust, on emerging trends, challenges, and more

BY ANAND ADHIKARI

SINGAPORE-HEADQUARTERED TEMASEK TRUST is at the forefront of philanthropic initiatives. Its parent, the private equity firm Temasek that has a portfolio of $288 billion, allocates a portion of its returns, to community purposes, channeling it to the trust as a philanthropic gift. In an interview with Business Today during his recent visit to India, 61-year-old Desmond Kuek, Executive Director & CEO of Temasek Trust, talks about philanthropy, climate change, and pilot programmes. Edited excerpts:

What brings you to India?

We have been focussed on four pillars—planet, people, peace, and progress. For the planet, it's clear that climate and nature are crucial, as are climate mitigation and the whole aspect of adaptation and resilience. We aim to create a greater

PHOTO BY MANDAR DEODHAR

THE CHANGEMAKER Desmond Kuek, Executive Director & CEO, Temasek Trust