

Even in the future, AR glasses... hold enormous potential. AI is going to be an empowering, creative tool for humanity.

Q: When we talk about AR, AI or beyond, what are the guardrails that need to be put in place to address deepfakes?

A: With the explosion in content creation being powered by AI, it's becoming even more important to authenticate real news; that's why we have a closed content platform on Snapchat. That means we decide the publishers who can be on our platform and we make sure that the content adheres to our content guidelines. Today, we should assume that more of the content we see has been created by AI... It's very important to authenticate real news.

Q: Most of your revenue comes from advertising. Equally, performance advertising is creating a lot of interest. How do you see that model playing out for Snap?

A: Performance advertising is an essential part of any business strategy for growth. It allows people to reach their customers in a personalised way with the assistance of AI and it's a more efficient way to reach out to customers. Businesses are achieving incredible growth in a way that wasn't possible before with brand advertising, that wasn't as personalised... this explosion is helping smaller businesses compete in a way that they never could before since they could not advertise at scale... Performance advertising has been a vital tool for small businesses to achieve their goals and that is one of the reasons why it's so exciting to be expanding our advertising offering here in India.

I think it's been great because globally we've had an opportunity to learn from Facebook and Google, and see how they've operated their platform to drive those results. What is challenging is that we're a much smaller company and being able to drive comparable results takes a lot of hard work from our engineering and product teams. That is an area where we've had to really invest and stay focussed.

Q: Snapchat is in a market that is competitive with the proliferation of social media. What makes your offering different?

A: When Bobby (Bobby Murphy, Co-founder & CTO) and I first started working on Snapchat, we wanted to make something that was different. There was a lot of pressure on social media because everything is posted forever and it's public, with likes and comments. So, social media feels like a popularity contest, where you need to look pretty or cool or perfect to get attention. Bobby and I just wanted a way to communicate and have fun together with our friends.

When we built Snapchat, we opened it to the camera but we also made sure that there weren't public likes and comments and that the content just goes away. That meant people feel comfortable reinventing themselves... We don't record every conversation we have with our friends when we're hanging out with them. Therefore, making conversation online, and more similar to real world conversation, is one of the reasons why people love Snapchat.

Q: Do you think Snapchat is at the right place at the right time today since there's so much talk about privacy?

A: When we started working on Snapchat, now almost 13 years ago, people were just discovering social media but didn't realise how much it had impacted their lives or made them uncomfortable communicating with
