rocked much of the world seems to have dissipated.

RBI Governor Das said that while growth had slowed down, a recession had not occurred due to the inherent resilience of advanced as well as emerging market economies. “A recession has not happened, and is unlikely to happen,” he said, adding that inflation is coming down.

The bureaucrat-turned-central banker, who is credited with deftly helming the RBI, summed it up best. “The mood is a lot better, but at the same time there is a sense of caution as to how the future will play out, more so in the background of continuing geopolitical tensions,” he remarked. BT
