> FUNDING It received $150-million in Series D funding in late 2021, making it a unicorn

► The extra "m" in Good Glamm was the result of many pleasant coincidences. Darpan Sanghvi allows himself a broad smile before saying all the domain names were gone and hence the name followed. An engineer by training, Sanghvi (44) went abroad for his Master's. After working overseas for some years, he returned. "That was in 2008 and what struck me was the dearth of beauty brands," he recalls. He saw a niche in beauty services; first came a franchise for L'Occitane, then D2C MyGlamm. In 2020, he acquired POPxo, a digital community platform for the millennial woman from Priyanka Gill, followed by BabyChakra, a content and community platform for young mothers, from Naiyya Saggi. In September 2021, the three merged to form Good Glamm. Now he plans to list the firm, which had revenue of ₹650 crore in FY23, by Diwali 2025. BT

► NEARLY A DECADE ago, investing in financial products wasn't very easy, at least for the regular Jane or Joe. Lalit Keshre, Harsh Jain, Neeraj Singh and Ishan Bansal, colleagues at Flipkart then, thought they should do something about it. The process to invest had to be simplified. With that in mind, they quit their jobs to launch Groww in 2016.

Today, Groww has managed to create a niche for itself in the hugely competitive broking space while offering products like stocks, mutual funds, ETFs, and derivatives and also expanding to offer loans and bill payment facilities. Recently, it hit the headlines by becoming the broking firm with the highest number of active clients (6.63 million at the end of September 2023), surpassing Zerodha (6.48 million), though Zerodha is way ahead in terms of profitability. Data from Tracxn shows that Groww clocked revenues of ₹1,427.8 crore ($172.7 million) in FY23 with a net profit of ₹448.8 crore ($54.3 million). This assumes significance as the start-up registered losses of ₹239 crore ($29.8 million) in FY22 with revenues totaling ₹368.8 crore ($46 million). BT
