

The Wellness Visionary: How Lohit Bansal is Redefining India's Real Estate Landscape

The PLPB Managing Director is pioneering purpose-driven development that puts human wellbeing at the center of every square foot built.

In an industry often criticized for prioritizing profit over people, Lohit Bansal stands as a refreshing anomaly. The Managing Director of PLPB, a progressive real estate and infrastructure development company based in Chandigarh, has made it his mission to transform how India thinks about living and working spaces. His flagship project, The Wellness City—a 90-acre bioclimatic township near Rajpura, Patiala—represents India's first LEED Gold Pre-Certified development focused entirely on holistic wellbeing.

"Our mission is purpose-driven growth, real estate that enriches people's lives and fosters holistic wellbeing," Bansal explains, articulating the philosophy that has guided PLPB's evolution under his stewardship. This isn't merely corporate speak; it's a fundamental reimagining of what real estate development can accomplish when human-centric design meets environmental consciousness.

As a second-generation entrepreneur building on over 30 years of collective family expertise, Bansal has infused PLPB with a distinctly future-forward ethos. "I've always believed we must build with empathy, not just ambition," he reflects. "Our projects, whether wellness-centric residential townships or next-gen industrial parks, are designed with people, planet, and progress in perfect harmony."

This philosophy manifests tangibly in The Wellness City, developed in collaboration with The Art of Living Foundation and endorsed by the US Green Building Council. The township integrates design concepts conforming to nature backed with a social purpose, featuring bioclimatic architecture based on the Five Elements of Nature and incorporating the Eight Pillars of Wellness. The development includes residential plots, premium villas, low-rise apartments, commercial complexes, and specialized senior living support—a first for the region.

But Bansal's vision extends beyond residential projects. PLPB IndusPark, spanning 150 acres along the strategic Amritsar-Kolkata Industrial Corridor, demonstrates his commitment to reimagining industrial spaces as "opportunity zones that drive sustainable growth." Tailored for MSMEs, startups, and FDI-driven enterprises, the park offers Orange & Green category-compliant infrastructure, positioning itself as a catalyst for economic empowerment and innovation.

The company's success stems from its unwavering value system anchored in five core principles: Sustainability, Innovation, Wellness, Care, and Purpose. This framework ensures that every project undergoes rigorous evaluation against two fundamental questions: "Why are we doing this? And how will it truly benefit the people who live or work there?"

Bansal's approach to development partnerships reflects this thoughtful methodology. PLPB collaborates with international architects and maintains strategic alliances focused on infrastructure compliance, ensuring adherence to globally recognized standards of excellence. These partnerships enable the company to deliver projects that compete on the world stage while remaining deeply rooted in local community needs.

Beyond bricks and mortar, Bansal has emerged as a passionate advocate for youth empowerment. Through comprehensive mentorship programs, he has reached over 5,000 young individuals, sharing entrepreneurial insights and encouraging socially responsible leadership. This commitment to human development mirrors his approach to real estate—investing in people as much as places.

Central to Bansal's worldview is a deep sense of gratitude and purpose. "What keeps me grounded and driven is the guidance of Gurudev Sri Sri Ravi Shankar ji and the blessings of the Almighty," he shares. "Their wisdom inspires my commitment to making a lasting difference through every square foot we build."

Looking ahead, PLPB remains committed to building a world anchored in equity, wellness, and sustainability. For Bansal, this represents more than a business goal—it's a social responsibility that redefines success in real estate development. "We are not just constructing buildings; we are crafting ecosystems that empower and inspire lives," he concludes.

In an era where environmental consciousness and human wellbeing have become paramount concerns, Lohit Bansal and PLPB are proving that purpose-driven development isn't just possible—it's profitable, scalable, and essential for India's sustainable future.
