

THE CHANGING LANDSCAPE OF INDIAN CONGLOMERATES

One of the developments Indian business groups need to look out for is the changing geopolitical world order and the realignment of countries like US, China, Russia, and Turkey

BY GEORGE SKARIA

Mahindra have not only survived, but thrived. With a significant share of revenue generated overseas, they have become the new global Indian MNCs.

Away from multigenerational family businesses, first- and second-generation groups like Mukesh Ambani's Reliance Industries Ltd, Gautam Adani's Adani Group and Sunil Mittal's Bharti Enterprises diversified to become the new giants of Indian industry. Chandrashekhara Sripada, Clinical Professor (OB) at Indian School of Business (ISB), says: "I think the combination of family orientation, the economic climate of the country, and the sheer gravitas and vision of leaders who wanted to make contributions in every field led to the growth of Indian conglomerates." Jubilant Group, led by the Bhartias, DCM Shriram and DS Group fall into a third group of conglomerates; they aren't as large as those in the first two, but possess the potential to get there.

PROFESSIONALLY MANAGED COMPANIES

Distinct from all the family business groups are widely held, professionally managed companies