LAWS AND SCHEMES MUST HAVE EXPIRY DATES

► An automatic expiry date for most legislations and schemes will improve efficiency and efficacy of policies. It will also bring clarity to investors and citizens about the end date of schemes and help them fructify plans. What's more, it would also de-clutter the statute books. A proposal to this end was also mooted by the law ministry but has not passed muster. Importantly, governments must stick to the expiration date.

INTRODUCE REGULATORY IMPACT ASSESSMENT

► How are policies working on the ground? Do they need to be tweaked to achieve the desired results? This is where regulatory impact assessment (RIA) comes into play. Used by several developed countries and advocated by policy experts, RIAs help governments improve the quality of decision-making. The World Bank notes that many governments still experience frequent regulatory failures. RIAs are an effective antidote!

ONE INDIA, ONE KYC

► While a central know your customer (CKYC) registry is already in place, there is a need to revamp it to enable financial inclusion and ensure that genuine users can use the facility with real-time updates and adequate data protection. A CKYC for all financial institutions would ensure that customers don't have to provide financial details every time they open a bank account, buy insurance or invest in mutual funds.
