The willingness to invest is a common theme across most large PSUs. "A large part of that confidence has come from profit numbers. Removing inefficiencies is a big reason for that," he says. Bolinjar cites the example of LIC, which has a dominant market share, even in an underpenetrated market. "This is unusual. From this point, growth is inevitable for LIC."

The thrust on volume is important. P M Prasad, Chairman, Coal India, says "volume growth maximises our revenue because the major cost is fixed. Any increase in volumes directly contributes to the bottom line." A report by Motilal Oswal after Coal India declared last fiscal's results said volumes would rise in FY26/27. Prasad says Coal India is "equally committed to sustainable and environment friendly mining practices to reduce the carbon footprint." To him, the outlook is clear. "The future of coal and our company is strong and secure for at least the next two decades till renewable energy become more dominant than in the present scenario," he says.

PSUs have also rewarded investors well. The BSE PSU Index has risen 153% between July, 1, 2022, and June 30, 2025. "If liquidity is strong, they outperform due to relatively cheaper valuations. However, investors must closely monitor execution and recovery capabilities," says Shripal Shah, MD & CEO, Kotak Securities. He says disciplined investing and long-term horizon (upwards of 12 months) can make PSUs a rewarding bet. "The momentum, though, will hinge on the strength of domestic macro indicators," he says.
