Chairman and MD of Glenmark Pharmaceuticals, does not hold back when he describes FY25 as “a defining year” for his company. “It was proof that the tough but bold choices we made to sharpen our portfolio, strengthen execution and anchor growth in sciences were the right ones,” he says.

To put it in perspective, 60% of Glenmark’s revenues come from branded markets and “breakthrough launches such as Brukinsa (for blood cancer) and Tevimbra (for immuno-oncology) in India, Winlevi (for acne) in the UK and Ryaltris (a nasal spray for allergies) across geographies are reshaping our presence in high-value therapies.”

This July, Ichnos Glenmark Innovation, an alliance between New York-based Ichnos Sciences and Glenmark, inked an exclusive global deal with AbbVie in the US. The aim is to develop and commercialise ISB 2001, an innovative cancer drug. “The $1.9 billion partnership has validated the strength of our science and placed us firmly on the global innovation map,” says Saldhana.

Of course, it’s still the beginning of a long journey for the likes of Reliance Power and Reliance Infra, but Anand Rathi’s Singhal gives them credit for lowering the debt-equity ratio.

“The group’s pivot to strategic sectors seems promising and there are early signs of financial recovery. However, the medium-term outlook hinges on successful execution of defence and renewable projects, continued debt reduction and transparent corporate governance,” he says.

The lessons learnt during the turnaround could prove invaluable considering the on-going turbulence in the global trade order. BT
