Dhar PM MITRA Park: Weaving a New Future for Madhya Pradesh

Madhya Pradesh is rapidly emerging as a model state for industrial investment, with the ambitious PM MITRA Park in Dhar at the heart of this transformation. Chief Minister Dr. Mohan Yadav, speaking at an interactive session on investment opportunities at ITC Maurya in New Delhi, called the present moment a “golden opportunity” for investors. He assured the business community that the state government would extend full support through infrastructure, incentives, and policy measures designed to guarantee the success of industries.

The event, attended by Union Textiles Minister Giriraj Singh and senior officials, was no ordinary meeting. It was a platform where Madhya Pradesh unveiled its vision not just to participate in India's textile revolution, but to lead it. The project, Dr. Yadav emphasized, could redefine India's place in the global textile industry.

A Golden Opportunity

The Chief Minister painted a confident picture of a state in transformation — strategically located, resource-rich, and powered by a government committed to partnership. “Madhya Pradesh is emerging as the model state for capital investment,” he said, while highlighting that the park aligns with Prime Minister Narendra Modi's 5F strategy: Farm to Fibre, Fibre to Factory, Factory to Fashion, and Fashion to Foreign.

For many investors, the words translated quickly into action. By the end of the session, 15 companies pledged ₹12,508 crore in investments, with the potential to create 18,000 jobs. Trident alone committed ₹4,500 crore, while Arvind Mills, Sanatan Textiles, and A.B. Cotspin Industries also announced significant investments.

A Textile Powerhouse in the Making

The Dhar PM MITRA Park is envisioned as India's largest integrated textile hub. Spread over 2,158 acres, it will bring together the entire value chain — from cotton cultivation to garment exports — in one seamless ecosystem.

Union Minister Giriraj Singh described the park as “a long-awaited solution to the textile industry's decades-old demand.” With an $800 billion global market at stake, he said, the park would give India a competitive edge by combining scale with sustainability, quality, and innovation.

Union Textiles Secretary Neelam Shami Rao echoed this optimism, describing the project as “Farm to Fashion in action.” She highlighted world-class facilities planned for Dhar — including Zero Liquid Discharge CETP, smart utilities, training centers, and industrial housing. With environmental clearances already secured, she assured that the park would be fully operational within 14–16 months.

“The sacred land of Madhya Pradesh welcomes all investors with open arms. Together, we will build a brighter future.”

Rooted in Heritage, Ready for Global Markets

Madhya Pradesh has always been part of India's textile story. From the timeless elegance of Maheshwari to the intricate weaves of Chanderi, the state carries a rich legacy. Dhar's PM MITRA Park seeks to marry this tradition with modern infrastructure, linking heritage to global markets.

Dr. Yadav reminded investors that Madhya Pradesh ranks seventh in cotton production and sits strategically between Gujarat and central India. With eight airports, strong rail and road networks, and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor running through its heart, the state offers unmatched connectivity. Above all, he emphasized a rare advantage: Madhya Pradesh has never witnessed industrial unrest.

Investors' Confidence Rising

The strong investor response underscored the state's appeal. Beyond Trident's landmark commitment, companies like Best Corporation Tiruppur, Sharmaji Yarn Pvt. Ltd., and Fabyan Textiles announced investments ranging from hundreds to thousands of crores.

Principal Secretary Raghvendra Singh placed this momentum in perspective. Madhya Pradesh already accounts for 24% of the world's non-GMO organic cotton and exported textiles worth ₹9,200 crore in 2024–25. With the Industrial Policy 2025 offering capital grants, subsidies, and export incentives, the state is poised for exponential growth.

Weaving the Future

As the session drew to a close, the atmosphere was charged with optimism. One-on-one discussions between industry leaders and government officials focused on translating commitments into projects on the ground. For many, the gathering felt less like a formality and more like the beginning of a new chapter. For Madhya Pradesh, Dhar's PM MITRA Park is not just an industrial project. It is a bridge between heritage and modernity, a statement of intent, and a symbol of the state's ambition to emerge as India's textile capital.
