ARTIST'S IMPRESSION

The Trophy Builder

How Kalpesh Mehta built Tribeca into India's largest developer of branded luxury residences — and a brand the market now pays a premium to own.

Kalpesh Mehta's ambition was never to build houses. It was to build trophies — the single most prestigious address in any market he enters.

Every great city has one: the building people point at, the address everyone wants to own and is willing to pay a premium for. Years ago, while working in Carlyle real estate private equity in New York after his MBA at Wharton, Mehta became fascinated by what made NYC's trophy properties so successful. The answer eventually became a company.

When Mehta founded Tribeca Developers in 2012, he had none of the ingredients traditionally associated with success in Indian real estate. He had no land bank, no development track record and no large pool of capital behind him. What he did have was a conviction that the industry was heading towards a future where product, design and customer experience would matter as much as land ownership and financial muscle.

Less than 15 years later, that conviction has transformed Tribeca into India's largest developer of branded luxury residences. The company operates across six cities, has built a development pipeline worth tens of thousands of crores, and has emerged as one of the most recognizable names in luxury real estate. Group sales have risen from approximately ₹1,800 crore in FY25 to ₹3,500 crore in FY26, with over ₹4,500
